I'll pass this on to janice and we'll consider this Ketchikan request if we're needed in the area to conduct state business on that same day - i know we want to get there to talk about Gravina. I don't know how that works yet, with travels that combine different functions such as this.

Are you liking DOA missions that you're on?

Tib- criticism we're hearing at first blush on ACES is we didnt flesh it out before presenting. That surprised me, as we're being transparent with our thought processes and debate, thus we wanted to roll this out so Alaskans would know where we're headed come Oct 18. Just fyi. Criticism was from Doogan, Crawford, talking heads on radio - but that's all I've heard so far in these parts. Some must have expected a bill to be rolled out today?

MESSAGE:

I am a long time Alaska Resident of 36 years. I have noticed throughout the years that hunting seasons are getting shorter, access to prime hunting areas is restricted, bag limits on animals is decreasing and overall the hunts cost a lot more money. As a child I remember going out with my dad and hunting for moose and caribou and this was how he fed the family. If we did not get anything that year, times were tough. But we ate good every night on the years we did get something.rnrnWhat this is all leading up to is that I am wondering what exactly the long term goal of the Governor is and the Department of Fish and Game. It would appear that it is to erradicate hunting from the poor and make it only affordable for the rich as well as decrease state population. Tier II programs don't work. I have applied many times in the past when I could barely afford to feed my family and was denied every time. Only when my father was alive and I could claim his time hunting as part!

of my own did I actually get a Tier II permit. And even then I could not afford to go hunt and harvest an animal with it.rnrnThis year they have done it again and have shortened hunting season in particular in Unit 14 and 16. 10 days may not seem like much but when that is the time of year that the bulls come down out of the mountains, well that 10 days means everything. Moose shot prior to that are usually spikes or forks. They are limited in number as well as the quantity of meat. I would like to know if they are going to trim the 11 days off the other end next year from August 20th to September 1st as they have already done in many other units that are actually accessible without an $80,000 airplane or a guide service. Then when the unit is accessible, they make the regulations and the hunt almost impossible. I challenge you or any other ordinary person to look through a set of binoculars and look at a moose head and tell me how big the rack is within 6 inches. B!

ut I suppose that helps generate revenue in "tickets&quo!

t; written to people just trying to hunt and do it legally. Look through a set of binoculars and tell me if a spike on a set of moose antlers at 300 yards moving through the trees is at least 1 inch high and taller than it is wide. I have not received any tickets but I know of several who have. I haven't seen a legal moose in over 5 years in Unit 13. Can we make this any more difficult? Hunting an animal isn't the challenge, reading regulations and spending 2 hours staring at an animal to decide if it is "legal" is challenging. It isn't man against beast, it's man against politics and regulation. rnrnIs the goal of the Governor and the Alaska Department of Wildlife Conservation and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game to get all of us hunters and fishers and trappers to leave the state? Hunting and fishing is the only reason I live here still. What else is there? 30-70 below temperatures? Overpriced everything? Seasonal Job Markets? Plugging in your c! ar in winter?rnrnPlease do me and 400,000 other registered Alaskan voters a favor and fix this problem. Stop them from closing off OUR fishing and hunting rights. As a slope worker, I was looking forward to coming down on September 18th to go hunting for 10 days. But I won't be doing that now. So my family will go without again this year as we have for past 5 years as I can't seem to find anything legal to hunt. Keep in mind, my family has hunted in unit 13 for the past 20 years and usually had no problems finding a legal moose when it was 3 or more brow tines on one side. But for some reason the bulls in unit 13, are different then the bulls in unit 14 and 16 as wellas most other units in the state for that matter, as those two units that are right next to it are 3 or more brow tines while unit 13 is 4 or more brow tines. Can you explain that? Me either. And some biologist will probably say that it's the food which is total hore pucky as the bushes in 13, 14 and 16!

are all pretty much the same.rnrnWell, I would be interested!

to know what you can do.rnrnSincerest regards,rnMark Caputo

Subject: Law of the Sea/Offshore Claims

Per your request for ongoing developments, below is a brief summary which appeared in Greenwire concerning the effort by various nations to map and claim submerged lands beneath the Arctic Ocean.

ARCTIC: U.S. maps ocean floor ahead of claims

Researchers sailed through the Arctic Circle last week mapping the ocean floor in preparation for the time when climate change will open up the North Pole's natural resources.

Using sonar and other mapping devices, the researchers charted a submerged plateau called the Chukchi Cap, part of a region in the Arctic Circle that may hold a quarter of the world's oil and natural gas reserves.

The gradual warming of the Arctic is preventing more and more ice from forming every year, allowing for feasible exploitation of the region's natural resources in the near future.

This is the third U.S. mapping mission in the Arctic Circle since 2003. The current mission aboard the U.S. Coast Guard icebreaker Healy comes as the countries around the Arctic Circle are all attempting to assert their mineral claims in the region under provisions of the 1982 U.N. Convention on the Law of the Sea.

The United States has not ratified the treaty, but Russia's recent mission under the polar ice cap and the Canadian military's assertion of its presence in the Arctic is propelling greater interest in staking the country's own claim in the region.

"It is a little overheated to say this is now a race to the Arctic," said John Bellinger, legal adviser to the U.S. secretary of state. "At the same time, we are very much aware that other countries, most particularly Russia, have been exercising their rights under the Law of the Sea Convention" (Robert Lee Hotz, Wall Street Journal [subscription required], Aug. 31).

Arctic claims should be lawful, Germany says

Germany warned other countries last week that no nation should break international law in an attempt to claim the Arctic's natural resources.

"I very much believe that everybody should respect international law," German Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier said last week. "The North Pole is not a law-free zone, there are international accords which must be respected by all nations who have interests here."

Last month, Russian explorers planted a ceremonial flag on the floor of the Arctic Circle as a statement of its claim, but Steinmeier said that "spectacular exploits mean very little" (Agence France-Presse, Aug. 28).

Only Russia, Sweden have made claims

Despite the posturing of the Arctic's five border countries for mineral claims under the Law of the Sea, only two -- Russia and Norway -- have made claims in the region.

The five countries, which include Canada, Denmark via Greenland and the United States, can all makes claims beyond their territorial boundary 200 miles offshore if they can prove those claims exist on their continental shelves.

Norway has laid claims to the seabed around the Svalbard archipelago and part of the Norwegian Sea. Those claims plus Russia's represent the only definitive claims in the Arctic Circle (Agence France-Presse, Aug. 31).

Hi Frank,

Great question! We rely on others to get us information. I knew about Lynne's dad, but had not heard about Annette's. So, now that you have told me, I will be sure to get a condolence letter to her. Thanks for letting me know.

Hi again Michelle,

Do condolence letters get sent to State employees automatically from the Governor, such as Lynne Smith in the Governor's office and Commissioner Annette Kreitzer whose fathers recently passed away? How do you typically find out about a death in the family such as this?

Thanks so much.

Frank

Mike- would you have Beth work with Seamount of the IOGCC speech. That's coming up quickly and I'm not sure what they're expecting from me. It's a 15-min speech titled "View from Alaska" is what I understand. The speech needs to be in the context of the meetings' agendas.

Flts late, haven't left yet and sounds like it may be awhile.

I can fly hm late tomorrow nite instead of thurs afternoon bc we've got some thursday mtgs I can catch up on.

Tib- criticism we're hearing at first blush on ACES is we didnt flesh it out before presenting. That surprised me, as we're being transparent with our thought processes and debate, thus we wanted to roll this out so Alaskans would know where we're headed come Oct 18. Just fyi. Criticism was from Doogan, Crawford, talking heads on radio - but that's all I've heard so far in these parts. Some must have expected a bill to be rolled out today?
